Snippets from Recent Club Programs

December 3 – Patrick Brunner, "Pest Control and Permaculture Design, and Central Rocky Mountain Permaculture Institute"

Patrick (our Spice of Life staff breakfast host) talked first about his working to create "bio-islands" and use invasive-species management at the Roaring Fork Golf Club near Aspen (see -- www.roaringforkclub.com). This involved releasing three types of weed-controlling insects, monitoring their progress and effectiveness, as well as intervening to pull weedy plants when necessary. The remainder of his talk was about the Central Rocky Mountain Permaculture Institute at Basalt, Colorado. The Center has a 25-year history of doing research and design of environmentally-friendly systems that store energy and release it when needed. Other systems they've developed help in the growing of different types of fruits and vegetables. They've found that small and slow systems are easier to maintain than big ones, making better use of local resources and producing more sustainable outcomes. For more information about the Institute, see -- www.crmipi.org/CRMPI/Home.html.

December 1 – Shawna Crocker, "History of the Cedar Pencil"

Shawna, coordinator of "Project Learning Tree" at the Colorado State Forest Service in Denver, first talked about her background of teaching science to elementary students in the 70's, when during this decade the U.S. space program had positive impact on increasing the content and quality of science books for secondary and primary schools. This has evolved to into today's "STEM" (science, technology, engineering, and math) classroom resources used by many Colorado schools. Regarding the "History of the Cedar Pencil" topic, Shawna talked about how she became interested in this topic of finding out where our tools come from and how much energy is used to make them. The idea of the pencil came about in 1564 when a large graphite deposit was discovered in Borrowdale, England. Adding of clay to graphite to create ranges of pencil hardness was first done by an officer in Napoleon's army in 1795. The common color of yellow for pencil bodies comes from the creation of pencils for the China aristocracy in the 1700's, where yellow was considered a "royal color". Today's pencils are made with materials from many countries, including from latex from South America, pumice from California, zinc and copper from 13 U.S. states and Canada.
