June 23 – Daniel Horsey, Reducing Conflicts and Strengthening Relationships

Daniel was born in New York, but raised in Boulder. He has a master's degree in Conflict Resolution and a background in theater. He told us about his training and coaching from boardroom to classroom focused on making our world a better place by strengthening advocacy through story. We learned about using storytelling to advocate effectively — for issues, and how he has used to help others in politics and business. He explained that the narratives of people change with time; our stories continue to expand with age. We cannot give knowledge to our teenagers, but they can see path forward using the older generation as models. He encouraged us to have good relationships with our children and grandchildren so that we can do something with them. He told us it is important in storytelling to: 1) share our values, and 2) then share an action that we want. He concluded the meeting by having us in small groups to share a personal value and to tell a short story with a transition line to share our values.
